The novel opens with the discovery of a baby's body in a suitcase. The baby has been dead for several years, and the suitcase has been hidden in the attic of a house in North London.

The house is owned by the Harper family, who are struggling to cope with the recent death of their teenage daughter, Alice. Alice's death was ruled a suicide, but her parents believe that she was murdered.

The discovery of the baby's body brings the Harpers' grief to a new level. They are forced to confront the possibility that Alice's death was not an
