Efraim Diveroli was once one of the world's most notorious gun runners. He supplied weapons to warlords and rebels in some of the world's most dangerous conflict zones. But today, he is a changed man. He has renounced his former life and is now an advocate for peace.

In his memoir, Once Gun Runner, Diveroli tells the story of his transformation. He grew up in a poor family in Israel, and he turned to gun running as a way to make a living. He was good at it, and he quickly made a lot of money. But he also saw the devastating effects of war, and he realized that he was contributing to the problem.

In 2005, Diveroli was arrested in Liberia. He was charged with arms trafficking, and he faced a long prison sentence. But he decided to cooperate with the authorities, and he provided them with information that led to the arrest of other gun runners. In 2009, he was sentenced to four years in prison. He served two years, and he was released in 2011.

Since his release, Diveroli has been working to make amends for his past. He has spoken out against gun violence, and he has worked with organizations that are dedicated to promoting peace. He has also written a book about his experiences, and he is currently working on a documentary film.

Once Gun Runner is a powerful and inspiring story. It is a story of redemption and hope. It shows that even the darkest of pasts can be overcome, and that it is never too late to change.
