The origins of Spooky can be traced back to Dahl's childhood fascination with the supernatural. As a young boy, he would often regale his friends with tales of ghosts and witches, sparking a lifelong passion for the genre. In the early 1960s, Dahl's literary agent suggested he create a television series based on his short stories.

Dahl embraced the idea with enthusiasm, seeing it as an opportunity to bring his chilling tales to a wider audience. He approached the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), which agreed to produce a 13-episode series entitled Spooky.
